Camille Hunt is an attorney at Waters Kraus Paul & Siegel in Los Angeles and a leader in the emerging field of litigation involving silicosis caused by exposure to silica dust from manufactured stone countertops. She represents workers who developed the progressive and often fatal disease after years of cutting, fabricating and installing engineered stone. Camille spearheads the firm's silicosis practice and has represented more than 100 workers diagnosed with the disease.

Camille approaches her work with determination, compassion and a commitment to building strong relationships with her clients. She understands that her clients are facing life-changing illnesses and works to make sure they feel supported while pursuing justice and accountability from the companies responsible for their exposure. Her background also includes representing people with mesothelioma caused by exposure to asbestos and talc, as well as a wide range of other toxic tort disputes.

An experienced trial lawyer, Camille played a key role in a $12.75 million talc-exposure verdict in 2026 and a record-breaking $20 million verdict in 2023 for the wife of a Rhode Island man who died of mesothelioma after exposure to asbestos-contaminated window glazing.

Her work on behalf of people harmed by toxic exposures reflects her belief that every experience presents an opportunity to learn and improve. She brings that mindset to the courtroom, recognizing that effective trial advocacy requires persistence, preparation and a willingness to keep growing.
